Convention time is here. The Journalists and advisors are planning for their annual jaunt to the national meeting. Ask anyone who has ever attended a N.M.P.A. or a Kappa Pi Beta convention about the helpful information they carried away and about the swell time they had.

School paper staffs will be very interested in the elaborate assortment of excellent designs, column headings, advertising illustrations, and interesting lectures that will be given by the leaders of the mimeograph paper work. The use of each adds to every publication's merits.

Good news has come from almost every chapter of Junior Kappa Pi Beta saying that they will be represented at the conference. It also extends a cordial invitation to the College Student body, and it hopes that as many as possible will attend the convention.

All during the six weeks I have been here I have been saying to myself "You must write some letters!" but so far I have got no further than the saying. I had expected to be lonely, to be more or less oppressed with spare time, but actually there has scarcely been a minute when I didn't have two or three things I could be doing. There was the town to be seen, my teaching (which is fairly easy) to attend to, riding every day at the Aibakai, golf if I had a mind to it, students to entertain, shopping to be done, and most important of all, Japanese to be learned.

I wonder if you know anything at all about Japanese? A Jesuit priest said in the 16th century that the language was the invention of the Devil for the torment of the damned; and I don't agree half-heartedly with him. Besides the Katakana and Hiragana, which consist of only about a hundred and ten characters, there are three or four thousand Kanji, of Chinese characters, which must be mastered before one can read the newspapers - and most of the Kanji have three or four different readings. One sign, for instance, means either rice or America, and is pronounced bei or koku, according to the context. Add to that the fact that the written language is as different from the spoken language as English is different from Latin, and you will begin to understand why most Japanese university students wear glasses. There are Americans who have spent thirty or forty years in Japan without ever learning to read Japanese. All of which, naturally, is very encouraging to me in my struggle.

Sapporo's climate is much warmer than I had expected. In fact, I think it's even warmer than Indiana's. To-day I have been out riding, first on my bicycle (yes, I've bought one) and then on my regular little brown cob, which has altogether too much energy for my peace of mind; and I was quite comfortable in an ordinary suit-coat. I have had a fire in my room only once, and I was half-ill then from a silly jaunt up three or four mountains. The women and children paddle about in the streets barefooted except for their clogs and don't seem to feel any discomfort. You should see the young mothers with babies on their backs. Japanese women are absolutely lovely; and when one begins swaying gently to and fro to quiet a crying baby the sight's as pretty as you could hope to see anywhere. The women are so shy, too - not at all like the push-and-go American product. When a clerk in a department store tells you the price of something she'll look down at the floor and blush, as though she were frightened to be actually talking to a man. But I was talking about the climate; and the upshot of it all is that I'm very pleased to be here instead of in Tokyo or some of the other southern cities, where the air is so deucedly (don't on page 8)

EX LIBRIS

A Farewell To Arms by Earnest Hemingway is a story of eroticism which causes many doubts in the reader's mind as to the social value of such a story. The best part of the book is that in which Hemingway describes the scenes of the break-up on the Italian front. The book has been highly praised by the readers of modern fiction, but I think such praise is due to a lack of having read the really good things in literature. It is filled with good description but its good points are overcome by the fact that the story is low and sensual. The plot is that of a young but not inexperienced, American soldier who falls in love with an English nurse. During the war the soldier is wounded and sent to the hospital in which his lover is a nurse. The scenes described in setting are not appropriate to be repeated here. Finally the two leave Italy and go to Switzerland where the story finds its end, an end which is inevitable after having lived such a life.

NOTE: The reviewer's opinion is not endorsed by others who have read and found it worthwhile by many.

A bit of verse for the throbbing sons of ole Cicero: You see a beautiful girl strolling down the street. She is singular, feminine and nominative... you walk across the street, changing to verbal and then become dative... you walk home together... her brother is an indefinite article and her ma is accusative and becomes imperative... you talk about the future and she changes the subject. Her father at last is present!!! Immediately you become past tense... thus... though once you were active, you now are the essence of a dead languish.

SPORTS FOOT BALL SPORTS
BEAT WARRIORS

The Purple Warriors proved their supremacy over Oakland City last Saturday when they defeated the "Oaks" 7-0, in a return game, the first one ending in a tie, 13-13.

For the first three-quarters of the game neither team threatened and most of the playing was between the 20 yard stripes.

Coach Loitzman surprised most everyone by starting his second stringers. They played very well. At the start of the second quarter the first string was inserted in the lineup and played the remainder of the game.

With but six minutes to go Wallace, a freshman halfback, broke loose on an off tackle play and scampered 56 yards for a touchdown. He was aided by perfect backing. Pike put the ball squarely between the goal for the extra point.

Neither team threatened the remainder of the game and the final score was 7-0 in favor of C. N. C.

Wallace and Albright were outstanding in the backfield, while Lattimer and Martin played nice games in the line.

SIDELINES

Another game stowed away in the victory bag. C. N. C. 7, Oakland City 0.

For a long time it looked like this would end just like so many others, a tie.

With six minutes to go Wallace broke loose on an off tackle play and with perfect blocking ran 56 yards for the score.

The warriors did not play as good a game as the week before but finally eked out to win.

Maybe Mr. Maxam does not know a college yell, is the reason he would not yell in Chapel.

Intra-Mural basketball has been announced and it won't be long until another season of Indiana's famous sport will be under way.

One more game and the pigskin season will be over for C.N.C. The boys travel to Charleston, Illinois to play. Good luck and may you end the season with a victory.

Central Normal is right up among the leaders in the conference. Congratulations fellows!

Camp that one suffers frightfully in summer and freezes in winter.

Perhaps you have heard that the Olympic Games may be held in Japan before long. If they are, the winter sports will take place here, about a mile and a half from my window. I've seen the ski-jump; a terrifying place it is, too. The snow here is what they call powder-snow and is ideal for skiing. Everybody, from the cradle on up, trundles out to the mountains on Saturdays and Sundays during the winter. The skiing champion of Japan is in our University--as is quite natural, since Hokkaido is the Lake Placid or St. Moritz of the whole Orient. I've already bought a pair of skis and skiing-shoes in preparation for the coming season. I wish you could have read some of the compositions my students wrote about their skiing experiences. Do you want a sample? Here's a paragraph I copied down:
"As my skiing was very unskilled, I was rather under the ski in snow than on the ski in air. But the snow I ate was very good taste. I slid very delightfully all day long, and at night I bathed in the spring and sang loudly." (There are hot springs in Hokkaido too.)

Another chap said that a "winter without snow in Hokkaido was like a garden without flowers." Rather nicely put, I thought; so I'm waiting for the flowers, but not impatiently, for I can ride in the meantime.

Thanks awfully for sending me the Crier. I read it from cover to cover. The quality of it seems to be improving constantly, if that's possible. You are doing a wonderful piece of work with it. I should appreciate very much hearing from anybody who is willing to take the time to write.

Dear Mom and Pop:

I thot I better write you another letter while I wasn't doing anything else. Oh, mom what do you think? The most wonderful thing has happened! Yep, that's it, I'm in love. You know they have up here what they call mixtures. I thot I would go this week so I went. Pretty soon some tall fellow with the cutest blond hair came up to me and asked if I cared if he danced. I told him no, but he just stood there and didn't dance any. Finally I guessed he wanted to dance with me so we began to dance. Pretty soon some other guy said, "Where'd you get that skirt, Dave?" Why I was so shocked to think he had on a skirt but I looked at him again but I didn't see any skirt on him. He kindly looked down at me and smiled so I looked up at him and smiled to. Oh gosh, mom, the look he gave me out of them eyes of his were enough to make any girl leave home. Oh, isn't love grand and glorious! Did you feel that way before you got married mom? Pretty soon they quit playin music so we quit dancing and he said, "There'd you been keepin yourself, all the time, infant?" So I thot I would be smart, so I said, "My mom just let me out of the cradel this afternoon." I guess that kindof scorched him cause he didn't say anything more again.

Oh, yeah before I forget it these eggs you sent up here kindly got broke and spilled all over those dresses you sent. But it's all right cause when they broke they kindly went on the dresses in splotches so I've just been wearin them just the same. I think those splotches kindly set the dresses in a class by themselves.
